

Ruminants like fibre.....

I thought that this was an interesting graphic of the reason why ruminants are successful survivors in some harsh habitats, but also as reinforcement of the fact that they steal very little food from the human mouth. It's a constant frustration that soya is so vilified and that cattle are seen so negatively for their consumption of soya bean meal, when it is a by-product of soya oil production and potentially may end up in land fill in the future if current lobbying continues and yet animals can make such great use of it.

